Who We Are

Good education data are necessary for good education decision-making. It is as simple as that. But collecting, maintaining, and using elementary and secondary education data effectively is a challenge that requires commitment, planning, training, and above all, coordination. It was for these reasons that the National Forum on Education Statistics was established.

The National Forum on Education Statistics is comprised of representatives of local and state education agencies, Federal agencies, and national and private organizations. The Forum is committed to the appropriate collection and use of education data, while remaining sensitive to data burden concerns. In short, it works to improve the quality, comparability, and utility of education data.

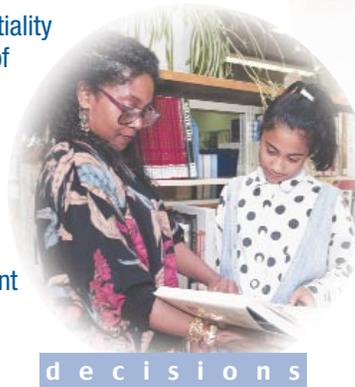

The Forum is sponsored by the National Center for Education Statistics of the U.S. Department of Education. It convenes twice each year to identify issues, exchange ideas, debate strategies, and generate recommendations for enhancing education data collection and use at local, state, and national levels.

Who We Serve

The Forum has developed a variety of resources intended to inform and assist individuals and organizations who use education data. Potential users of Forum resources include people responsible for:

- making informed decisions about education
- developing data collection instruments
- converting “data” into useful information
- determining the confidentiality status of different types of information
- exchanging information electronically, including student transcripts
- selecting and purchasing new technology equipment
- installing computers, networks, or other technology systems
- securing or otherwise protecting information and equipment
